UNIVERSAL PERIODIC REVIEW

The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela fulfil its obligations arising under International Conventions and Covenants on Human Rights and promotes a systematic policy in order to respond effectively and monitoring periodic reports to the Treaty Bodies.

The Venezuelan State constitutionally recognizes the rights of the people as specific and original rights, incorporating its multi-ethnic, pluricultural and multilingual character.

The Venezuelan State boosts universal and indivisible conception of Human Rights, in law and practice, supporting the creation of the Human Rights Council (HRC) and welcoming the institutional framework of the Universal Periodic Review (UPR).

The UPR for Venezuela has a profoundly popular character, becoming the main axis of the public policies that support Participative Democracy, encouraging permanent assessment and questioning from the organized communities to the State.
