Dear friend,

The United Nations and the Middle East

The United Nations Association (UK) has produced this Briefing on the United Nations and the Middle East. It agreed to do so when, at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations, on which I serve, a proposal was made that the Federation should voice its concern at the lack of balance in the language of UN resolutions on the Israeli-Palestinian issue. In order to be able to assess that claim, this Briefing was produced by an intern, Veronica Lie, who is working with us in UNA headquarters. I am very grateful to her.

This Briefing summarizes all the resolutions discussed in the UN Security Council and General Assembly between 1990 and 2003. The texts are often unbalanced in terms of the length of criticism and condemnation of Israeli actions in the Occupied Territories as against Palestinian actions such as suicide bombings.

When I was in New York in March, I briefly discussed the question of how useful such resolutions are with the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom at UN Headquarters. He told me that the European Union group at the UN was seeking to establish a broad discussion on that very subject by asking the question, "Does the language in these resolutions contribute positively to the peace process in the Middle East and, if so, how?"

UNA-UK fully supports that proposed dialogue and hopes that this Briefing will provide a useful resource document to its being carried forward.

We hope very much that you will find it both informative and useful. Your comments on it would be very welcome.

FINDINGS

Conclusions & a note on methodology

On the basis of the UNSC and UNGA Resolutions assessed, the United Nations was found to be palpably more critical of Israeli policies and practices than it is of either Palestinian actions or the wider Arab world. However, criticism is not necessarily a product of bias, and it is not the intention here to suggest that UNGA and UNSC reproaches of Israel stem from prejudice. From the perspective of the UN, Israel has repeatedly flouted fundamental UN tenets and ignored important decisions. Omitting a recognition of Israel's breach of international law in subsequent resolutions would diminish the credibility of UN authority and of its legitimacy as the primary guarantor of international peace and security. Whether or not the decisions themselves are based on completely accurate interpretations of events is an entirely separate issue.

Because of the more pronounced level of criticism in the General Assembly Resolutions, it was thought superfluous to give each resolution an individual score. With a few exceptions, the UNGA Resolutions are more or less critical towards Israel and express sympathy with the Palestinian experience. The UNSC Resolutions evaluated were less uniform in their censure of Israel; it was thus more feasible to give each resolution a negative or neutral figure, depending on its perceived treatment of Israel. A negative figure was generally given when the condemnations of Israeli policies were explicit. However, it should be noted that this "method" is highly subjective, imprecise and potentially misleading.

Security Council Resolutions

Given the permanent membership of the United States on the United Nations Security Council, the UNSC Resolutions over this period were predictably neutral towards Israel. Actions, such as "the excessive use of force", were condemned, but the agent of such force was rarely named explicitly. George Bush, incidentally, has pledged to veto any resolution condemning Israel which does not also denounce terrorism orchestrated against Israel.

General Assembly Resolutions

As one would expect, resolutions passed in the same period by the General Assembly were far more explicit in their condemnation of Israel. Underpinning these resolutions is the conviction that Israel is in clear breach of international law, the implications of which were stated to extend beyond the region to threaten global peace and stability as a whole. It is repeatedly stressed throughout the resolutions that international consensus favours the Palestinians. Israeli actions are attributed with thwarting Palestinian socio-economic and educational development and are implicated, furthermore, in impairing the psychological health of Palestinian children. Violence perpetrated against Israeli civilians, including the use of suicide bombers, is mentioned only a few times and then in only vague terms. Violence against Palestinian civilians, on the other hand, is described far more explicitly. Israeli occupying forces are condemned for the "breaking of bones" of Palestinians, the tear-gassing of girls' schools and the firing on hospitals in which a specific number of women were said to be giving birth.

Another trend noted in General Assembly Resolutions is a progressively more anodyne tone towards Israel throughout the period examined. This is reflected in a decreasing tendency of resolutions to specify Israeli culpability in policies and practices reviewed by the General Assembly; compare, for example, UNGA Resolution 47/70 with 58/21.
